Chapter 1 by Alice Marie Bride

The Masked Man stared down at her lifeless body- she looked like she was sleeping. Her chest, like swelling mountains, stood still... towering over the valley of her stomach. He grinned wickedly.

She's always looked pretty in white.

The Masked Man had observed this fair maiden since she was very young. He watched her stumble around and play on the playground in kindergarten, he had watched her run in track in High School.. (she was the head runner) He had watched her grow up to be a fine women, as her ancestors before her.

They've all looked pretty in white.

Still, he could only admire her from afar.

She was stunning in white.
